Bargains for FALL PLANTING

DON'T BE DISAPPOINTED—PLANT STRAWBERRIES THIS FALL

Due to labor shortage, the available supply of strawberry plants is not large. Why wait until spring and possibly be disappointed? Plant this fall—be sure of getting the varieties you want. Fall set plants will make some root growth before ground freezes and be all ready to make a quick start when the frost is out of the ground in the spring. Wet weather, in the spring, often holds up planting until too late to get a good start. We have set out ten acres every fall for several years and have found this the most ideal time. Further, due to the cool weather, plants are not apt to heat in transit. Although it is not absolutely necessary, it might be well to mulch the plants after the ground has frozen solid. Don't wait—plant this fall and be sure of a nice patch of luscious red berries. All plants are twice state-inspected. Stock will be fully matured and ready for shipment October 10th, and can be planted until the ground freezes.
